

USS LIBERTY WRECK TULAMBEN

DIVE THE WORLD MOST FAMOUS SHIPWRECK

BALI

1941

Today

Tulamben is a small fishing village on the north-east coast of Bali. It is among the most popular dive sites on Bali since the wreck of the Liberty, a US Army Transport ship torpedoed by a Japanese submarine in 1942 lies just off shore. It is also one of the world top 10 dive site. During high-season, up to 100 divers descend to the wreck each day. Today it is also name as the macro heaven by the underwater photographers and divers. Thousands of award winning underwater shots were taken from here.

The town's name is derived from the word batulambih, which roughly translates as "many stones", a reference to the destructive eruptions by Mount Agung that have affected this part of Bali from time to time. The beach in Tulamben is not made of sand, but is entirely covered with fairly large, smooth stones. The modern name evolved over time, first to "Batulamben" and finally settling on the contraction Tulamben

The wreck lies in shallow water and is considered appropriate for divers of all certification levels. The ship rests in 30 metres of water, is roughly 25 metres from shore and can be reached with a short swim from the beach. The highest point of the wreck tops out about 5 metres from the surface. The ship was torpedoed by the Japanese off the nearby Island of Lombok and the ship was towed to the beach at Tulamben for salvage operations. The 1963 eruption of Mt. Agung, which devastated much of the eastern side of Bali, drove the ship into the water just off shore, where it became encrusted with coral and a home to other sea life.

The best conditions for diving here are during October and November, when the weather is generally calm and during the start of southeast monsoon, which typically extends from May to July. In addition to a wide variety of corals and invertebrates on the wreck itself, large fish frequent the wreck in some seasons, most popularly Mola mola and whale sharks, as well as Black-tip reef sharks.

The Liberty

One of the most famous shipwrecks in the world rests just offshore of Bali's Tulamben. Built in 1918 in New Jersey, the Liberty is 120m long, 17m in beam and weighed 6,211 tons. During World War 1, the Liberty made several trips from New York to France, carrying horses and general cargo. By the time the United States entered World War 2 in December of 1941, the Liberty was in the Pacific, continuing its function as a cargo ship.

On January 11th, 1942, the conscripted US cargo ship was carrying rubber and railroad parts from Australia to American bases in the Philippines. During its journey, the Liberty was torpedoed by Japanese submarine in the Lombok Strait.
